Throughout my childhood, I have always been interested in public affairs, history, and politics. I have worked on several campaigns for people who are willing to make the community, as well as my state, a better place to live. I have also campaigned for public affairs issues, such as keeping an important event center in my county, and for collective bargaining and union rights. Through these campaigns, I have acquired many heroes who are working hard to enhance their community. This is something that I would like to do once I graduate college. After serious consideration, I have chosen to pursue my dreams and go into public affairs. With this degree, I will be able to run for office and make my state a place where people want to live. If I do not run for office, I will still be able to help enhance the state with this degree. I will know each public affairs issue in depth, and will do what I can to help resolve the issue. As a result, the campaigns that I work on in the future will be even more personal, and I will be even more determined to put an end to the issue. One of my major goals for pursuing studies in the studies of public affairs is to revitalize the county where I live. I have lived there my entire life, and have seen how people who live outside of it see it as a "ghetto" and would never enter the county. Although this is mostly taking place in the city, it is also occurring throughout the county. With this degree, it will be easier to revitalize the county and make it a place where people are once again proud to live and somewhere people want to visit. With the help of the others in office, I am going to help lower the poverty rate in the county, and lower the unemployment. I am then going to raise public safety so the county is safer and crime rates are lower. As a result, people from other counties will see it as a better place, and they will come visit. I am excited to pursue studies in public affairs because it is one of my great interests, and it will help me to make my state a better place to live.
